Huerta is impeached, but where is the court to try him?

Another week of danger in the Vermont woods gone, and only one more to follow.

The wealthy man of today—he who controls a dozen eggs and has a Harvard-Yale football ticket.

The United States is finding that it is safe to confer with neither party in Mexico unless with both eyes open.

Hetty Green spent her 78th birthday cutting golden coupons, proving again that green and gold go well together.

Scores of people went in bathing at Atlantic City on Nov. 20—and they are still alive to tell the wonderful tale—so long is summer lingering in the lap of winter.

Must be the Dayton, O., press agent is at work. Turned down by Colonel Goethals, he proposes to get the only T. R. for business manager of his city. It is a sorry reflection on home talent.

The present occupant of the White House is a precedent-buster sure enough. He refuses to have a New Year's reception and he goes to Kentucky for his Thanksgiving turkey, thus showing Rhode Island off the turkey map.

The bichloride of mercury route will lose its ill-gained notoriety if the canny surgeons are successful in the blocking of it, as they seem to be at the present time. Rather startling measures are included in their efforts, or they would be startling efforts if we had not resigned ourselves to expect nearly anything in the medical and surgical lines.

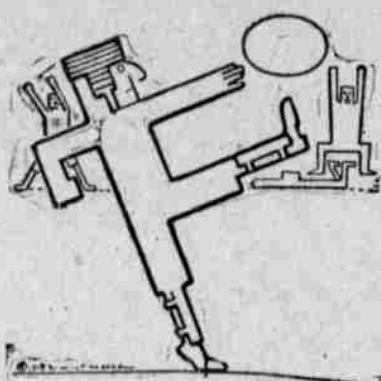

The militant suffragette who wrote "Votes for Women" on the White House steps with the intention of attracting the attention of President Wilson probably does not know the kind of a man she is dealing with, for she took the worst course possible to enlist his sympathies although she may have caught his eye. Foolishly moved, she hurt her cause by the boldness of her act.

The Maine state teachers' convention was attended by about 3,500 teachers. And we think we're doing well if we get out 1,500 teachers at the Vermont state convention! There is something wrong when only one-half of Vermont's teachers turn out for the only good chance from one year's end to another to receive fresh, progressive ideas in methods of school teaching. A little shaking-up would not be a bad thing for the teaching force in Vermont.

It was a most remarkable shooting accident that was recorded in a Massachusetts town during the open deer season there, a hunter being shot as he was carrying the carcass of a deer on his back. The skin of the deer was visible above the top of the bushes and as it was moving, a party of hunters blazed away at an elevation which they considered would hit a vulnerable spot on the supposed animal, only to be startled by a human cry of distress as one of their bullets found lodgment in the leg of the hunter carrying the deer carcass. In this instance, although there naturally is sympathy for the injured man, there is little, or no, inclination to hold the other hunters responsible for the shooting. It was a very unwise thing for the other man to proceed through the woods with the carcass of a deer on his back; indeed, it was nothing more or less than an invitation to shoot, as all the indications were that there was a deer stalking through the underbrush. In view of the multiplicity of hunters out after deer, one would never have thought that warning against such action was necessary.

THE LOSS OF DARTMOUTH GAME TO BOSTON.

Whatever other false premises he may start upon, Mayor Fitzgerald of Boston is right, it must be admitted, in stating that the city of Boston loses not a little by the cancellation of the annual Dartmouth football game by Harvard university. Of course, Harvard is not arranging its athletic schedules on the ground that such and such games will bring business to Boston; the university follows its own line of thought in selecting teams for competitors, with little or no regard for Boston, or that part of Boston not included in the university family. If it were arranging a schedule with a view to getting the best drawing cards, surely Dartmouth would not be left off the list, for the annual game with the Hanover institution brings thousands into Boston, who carry in a considerable sum of money and who leave most of it in Boston and its vicinity. Moreover, many take that time of the year to transact business with Boston firms, combining business and pleasure. Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont send down people in large numbers, while other states of New England add their quota, all of them with legal tender that the hotel keepers, the restaurant owners, the mercantile firms, the cab drivers, the theatres and many others eagerly seek after—and get, let it be added. Therefore, little wonder is it that a man who is seeking after the commercial advantage of Boston, as Mayor Fitzgerald is, should find fault with the act of Harvard university in cutting Dartmouth off the schedule. It is quite a blow to Boston.

CURRENT COMMENT

A Gubernatorial Suggestion.

Vermont will elect a governor next November and already several names have been "mentioned" and some papers have laid down the rules which the Republican party must follow if it would continue its existence. So the campaign of 1914 is beginning and we would submit a few suggestions.

First, the Republican party should support a man for the nomination with other qualifications than those of a fat pocket book. With the exception of the late C. J. Bell, candidates for the Republican nomination for governor for the last decade have been men of wealth and it is a matter of common knowledge that their elections have cost them large sums of money. The majority of Vermonters are opposed to this kind of politics but they have never organized enough to defeat it. So long as men of money are put forward as candidates money will have to be spent to put them into office and it doubtless will be done as long as money is able to overcome the latent opposition to it. In view of these facts it would seem advisable for the Republican party to unite upon some man whose qualifications are more evident than his money.

A man is needed at this time who has stood for further legislation in the interests of the public, a man who would stand for only what sane judgment approves rather than everything popularly labeled progressive, a man trained in public work with a record that will inspire confidence regardless of party divisions. Vermont has such a man and, without declaring ourselves for or against any of the men "mentioned," we state his name to be Guy W. Bailey, secretary of state.

Mr. Bailey could not and would not accept the nomination if it meant the expenditure of a good sized fortune to secure it. He is credited with other political ambitions. But the Republican party has given him liberal recognition for years and he can not now consistently refuse to serve the party where he can do it the greatest good. Our suggestion is that the time has come when the Republican party can greatly strengthen itself, arouse genuine enthusiasm and win an honorable victory if it will unite and present to the people the name of Mr. Bailey for governor in 1914.—St. Johnsbury Caledonian.

The Massachusetts Insane.

Right-thinking people, with a proper sense of social responsibility, cannot be indifferent to the "disclosures" now current in relation to our institutions for the insane. Conditions within the walls are confessedly bad. They are conducted on too small an allowance. But, in criticizing them, certain consideration should be borne in mind as fundamental to the situation.

None of the authorities of the Commonwealth, or of the respective asylums, want to keep any person in them who is well enough to be out in the world. These places are desperately crowded; patients are in some cases sleeping in the corridors; and the nurses and physicians are overworked. The number of inmates increases much faster than the state supplies facilities for their care. In such circumstances nothing would please the asylum officials more than to be relieved of some of their burden. And while individuals in the outside world may, and often do, have a motive for desiring to get somebody incarcerated, the hospital management itself has everything to gain by the opposite policy.

It is true that the state institutions contain many patients who should be cared for elsewhere, as in private homes. And when a witness says that certain inmates do not need the restraint of an asylum, the community jumps to the conclusion that this is a horrifying acknowledgment. But it is not so bad as that unless some other place for such persons can be actually found. In Scotland most of the insane are boarded out in families. This state has such a provision, and likes to act under its terms. The only trouble comes in getting the families. If suitable households will not take the unfortunate at a price which the state can afford to pay, and if their own families and friends will not care for them, just what else is the state to do with them when what it is now doing?

It should be noticed always that the incarceration is not always distinct between the insane and other types of the deficient and dependent classes. Poverty is a confusing factor. As between the almshouses and the insane asylums, families are usually eager to get an unfortunate into the latter grouping. Much pressure is brought to bear, often resulting in the manufacturing of testimony with that end in view. The decisions of the courts and of the asylum authorities can never be absolutely just or accurate. They doubtless have many people who properly belong somewhere else. The notion prevails that insanity is rapidly increasing. The number of inmates are, but not the sufferers from the affliction. Under modern conditions a larger number of people are so adjudicated, because those phases of life which produce the biggest crop of candidates, like the crowded tenements of the cities, foreign population, unadjusted to an American environment, etc., are constantly increasing. But the doctors tell us that some progress has actually been made in reducing the number of the mentally deranged. And more progress will be made with more money.

The state should break up its elephanine institutions in the cities and spread their inmates over large areas of the country where some of them can cultivate the land and otherwise develop occupational interests, and where all can get some slight measure of enjoyment out of life. The state should also spend more money on physicians. It should raise the wages of the nurses, so as to get a more permanent class of employees and of higher grade. In these respects our insane situation calls for improvement. But in all the fundamentals the state is doing about as well as the means now at its command permit. There is no royal road to remedy. Conditions that are bad are so from causes similar to those responsible for bad highways, etc., except that the good road has more energetic friends than the poor forgotten insane.—Boston Herald.

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

"Quo Vadis" Photo Drama at Opera House Next Week.

Women and children are particularly interested in George Kleine's mammoth photo-drama production "Quo Vadis" which is to be the important attraction at the Barre Opera house for three nights and two matinees commencing with a matinee Thanksgiving with daily matinees thereafter. The women revel in the beautiful love story that is unfolded in the charming Sienkiewicz romance while the children appreciate its vast aid to their study of Roman history and take particular delight in the big spectacular features—the burning of Rome, the chariot races, combats of the gladiators and thrilling experience of the Christians when thrown to the hungry lions in the arena—and the grown-up children, the men, seem to enjoy it as much as their wives and offspring. It has a wonderful appeal to all society and is doing a remarkable business.—Adv.
